

WORTH KNOWING

Level 1-4
10-20 mins

What's something people should know?

Wellness Domains

Occupational / Intellectual

Topic:

Sharing Knowledge & Life Experience

Goals:

Contribute at least one piece of advice, preference, or insight, expressed verbally or non-verbally

Materials (Included/Subs):

- Paper, card stock, or small board
- picture or memento
- Thick marker or pen
- Prompt cards (optional)
- Phone or camera (optional)
- Optional upgrade: Scarf, jacket, or item that makes the person feel "put together"

Background:

This activity is meant to support a person's sense of usefulness, identity, and contribution by engaging familiar roles, skills, or decision-making patterns from their life. This is about being someone, not doing a task correctly. You are not asking what they did. You are exploring what they know.

Structure / Activity:

Steps:

1. Choose the knowledge type to share before starting or after the next step with the participant.
 - Life advice
 - Work habits
 - Relationships
 - Daily routines
 - Handling hard days
 - Doing something "the right way"
2. Begin by sharing a photo or memento from the person when they were younger to help frame their role. Let them reminisce, if they want. Encourage them to share their wisdom. Ex:
 - "People could learn from you."
 - "You've figured some things out."
 - "If someone asked you, what would you tell them?"
3. Capture the Know-How (Possible Expressions)

a. Level 3/4

- Participant discusses advice
- Writes or dictates down and presents it

b. Level 2

- Participant chooses from prompt cards
- Help assemble and edit into a statement

c. Level 1

- Ask yes/no and either/or questions
- Construct advice with participant confirmation based on the questions

4. Make it official. Write the advice on a card, whiteboard, paper. Have the person review and approve it.
5. Wrap up with a Share or Save. With consent, take a photo of the participant with the advice or just the advice itself. Explain why simply:
 - "We can share this with your family."
 - "We can save this."
 - "Others might like to see this."

Adaptations & Safety Precautions:

Limited speech or processing:

- prompt cards with visuals
- write the advice, read it back for confirmation
- allow them to express the advice visually- drawing, song, etc.
